Crime Statistics In South Korea:

The Age, Period, and Cohort Effects on Crime Rates in the Republic of Korea Byunggu Kang, 2023 The age crime relationship has been a theoretical and empirical puzzle for criminologists for decades Although the age crime curve is often considered a stylized fact a large body of research suggests that the age crime relationship is dynamic under the influence of age period and cohort effects The impact of these effects can vary across different social contexts as the consistency or variability in socio economic and cultural factors experienced by consecutive generations or populations differs in each context Thus the extent to which age period and cohort effects contribute to the age crime relationship in various social contexts is a question that requires further investigation In particular the age crime relationship in Korea which largely differs from the archetypical age crime curve and has varied considerably within the country over the last four decades offers a rich empirical context for better understanding age period and cohort effects Using age and gender specific arrest data for the years 1976 2019 this dissertation contextualizes how age period and cohort effects contribute to the age crime relationship in Korea Study 1 revisits the age and sex compositional effect on homicide rates in Korea a country that has undergone significant demographic shifts and rapid socio economic changes in the past 70 years Study 2 examines whether cohorts characterized by high birth rates or a higher sex ratio contribute to the increase in the peak age of offending during the last four decades Study 3 compares the stability of cohort effects among three consecutive birth cohorts with large cohort sizes which share similar demographic characteristics but have distinct sociohistorical experiences amid Korea's rapid social changes These three empirical studies contribute to our understanding of the dynamic nature of the age crime relationship shaped by population dynamics and social context offering empirical and theoretical insights into the interplay among age period and cohort effects of describing what a national system of data on crimes known to the police might look like The key distinction between the rigorous classification proposed in this report and the classifications that have come before in U S crime statistics is that it is intended to partition the entirety of behaviors that could be considered criminal offenses into mutually exclusive categories

Crime and Justice, Volume 43 Michael Tonry,2014-12-15 Violent and property crime rates in all Western countries have been falling since the early and mid 1990s after rising in the 1970s and 1980s Few people have noticed the common patterns and fewer have attempted to understand or explain them Yet the implications are essential for thinking about crime control and criminal justice policy more broadly Crime rates in Canada and the United States for example have moved in parallel for 40 years but Canada has neither increased its imprisonment rate nor adopted harsher criminal justice policies The implication is that something other than mass imprisonment zero tolerance policing and three strikes laws explains why crime rates in our time are falling The essays in this 43rd volume of Crime and Justice explore the possibilities cross nationally They document the common rises and falls in crime and look at possible explanations including changes in sensitivity to violence generally and intimate violence in particular macro level changes in self control and structural and economic developments in modern states The contributors to this volume include Marcelo Aebi Andromachi Tseloni Eric Baumer Manuel Eisner Graham Farrell Janne Kivivuori Tapio Lappi Sepp I Suzy McElrath Richard Rosenfeld Rossella Selmini Nick Tilley and Kevin T Wolff
